To the office this morning. The news from Germany is bad, despite the Chancellor's defiant and somewhat confident statements.

Lunch with the children - at least they are unaware of the European Army, and presently concerned with lions, tigers, armadillos and red -- Indians.

Talked to Tommy and Monnet. Tommy is still in hospital, but apparently no danger is apprehended from his recent hemorrhage.

Made a few excursions into the antique field and was pleased with a forged iron table - marble topped - confected for us by the ever-conscientious and delightful Pernet.

Glorious weather, the chestnut blooms incredibly profuse and breath-taking.

Walked at Versailles, and pondered on the vicissitudes of the Community of Six.
